ONLINE FORMS

Our session this month didn't include a presentation, instead it was a live demonstration of online forms.

We used two providers, Microsoft and Google – other online forms are available of course. You need some sort of account for Microsoft; a Microsoft subscription, a Hotmail account, an Outlook account or the like and for Google, you need a Google account, either a personal one or a Workspace account.

The URLs are as follows:

<https://forms.microsoft.com>

<https://docs.google.com/forms>

With a little bit of experimentation, it is quite easy to come up with a basic form. We went a step further and added in branching whereby depending on your answer to one question you are taken to a different part of the form to answer the next bit.

Working in pairs, club members created an online form that included some branching. Time constraints meant that we didn't have time to top and tail them and to fully check the forms logic, but it was a good afternoon, and everyone seemed to enjoy themselves.
